Strategies and techniques to teach reading. Pre-reading, while reading and post reading activities. Pre-reading activities are an essential part of the reading lesson because of the following: They help students be more prepared for what they are about to read. These activities help learners anticipate the topic of the reading. Formulating expectations about the content of the text help learners prepare themselves for the kind of language, vocabulary, and even grammar that might be used in the text. These activities create the need for reading the text to know more about a topic. If the aim of the teacher is to test comprehension, spelling mistakes, as well as grammar mistakes, may be tolerated. Commands. Instead of questions, students answer commands such as "Pay attention to your English," "Too many errors," or worse yet, the trite and useless "Awkward." Most teachers cannot explain the errors, and because teachers teach what they know, they therefore never teach ELLs about pertinent grammar issues. Another example of the importance of knowing ESL grammar involves judging the level of a reading passage. Teachers frequently ask about the grade level of certain reading material.
